Overview
Families are dynamic social units potentially made up of different and complex combinations of individuals, that may be under constant change. Young people's adolescent stage of physical, social, emotional and cognitive growth often influences, or is also associated with, changes in the nature of relationships with their family. Adolescent/parent relationships vary greatly between dependent and independent status, and between harmony and conflict. However, the need for stability, encouragement and support from family remains constant.

Relationships
The stage of rapid physical, emotional and social development in adolescence is also associated with parallel change in the patterns and nature of relationships with family and peers.

Pre-adolescence - Relationships tend be based around same-sex peer groups.

Mid-adolescence - Peer groups start to play an important role in helping to define the adolescent's identity, independent of the family; including the development of the sex role identity. Peers become an important source of social support and companionship and play a significant role in the shaping of thoughts and ideas. Feelings about romantic and sexual relationships begin to form.

Parents still play an important role in adolescent decision-making through continued support and advice.

Late adolescence - Friendships become more stable, interdependent and tolerant of differences in others. In contrast to the egocentric nature of earlier relationships, adolescents become more concerned about the impact of their behaviour on significant others.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Positive aspects/benefits of adolescent peer groups</th>
<th>Negative aspects/challenges of adolescent peer groups</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Opportunity to develop new friendships</td>
<td>Individuality may be suppressed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Opportunity to learn social skills</td>
<td>Anxieties and psychological traumas may be caused by peer group rejection</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assist in developing concept of self and identity</td>
<td>Desire for peer acceptance may cause adolescents to compromise their beliefs and values</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communication skills enhanced</td>
<td>Conformity can lead to intolerance of those who are</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Positive aspects/benefits of adolescent peer groups

- Opportunity to develop healthy sexual relationships
- Forum to share and solve problems
- Can provide supportive relationships
- Self-esteem can be enhanced
- Can share experiences, activities, etc.

Negative aspects/challenges of adolescent peer groups

- Desire to be seen to conform can lead to emotional isolation

---

Peer influence

Peers play an integral role in adolescent mental and emotional development. The effect that peers can have on attitudes, values or behaviour may be positive or negative. Peer pressure is a commonly used term describing the powerful expectations and influences of similar aged friends to conform to particular attitudes, beliefs or behaviour.

Remind students that positive relationships of all types are characterised by good communication and mutual respect.

---

Relevant resources

Websites

- The Line
Adolescent relationships
Background Note

Healthy family relationships, Kids Helpline
Handling peer pressure, Kids Helpline

Fact sheets/booklets/videos
Relationships, families and friends, Get the Facts

Research and reports
Evidence summary: Adolescent romantic relationships - why are they important? And should they be encouraged or avoided?

Postscript

This Background Note relates to the following Learning Activities:

- Peer influence
- Respectful vs disrespectful relationships

Date printed

16 April 2020